

Architecture_media_politics_society (AMPS C.I.O.)

Architecture_media_politics_society (AMPS C.I.O.) is a non-profit research organisation. Its peer-reviewed, open access journal Architecture_MPS (ISSN 2050-9006) is published with UCL Press. It represents a first in scholarly publication in that it is run by both an academic and a librarian team.

The AMPS Intern Training Program is for recent graduates and MLS students. It is specifically designed to prepare early careers librarians for the changing nature of the job market in which their ability to transfer their skills to non-standard contexts will be a key attribute.

Several positions are available in:

1. Digital Archive/ Resource Repository/Outreach

You will be integral to collating an innovative resource repository of open access online information. Central to this will be outreach through online channels, principally social media (Twitter, Facebook, Pinterest). The resources will vary and will be related to our conferences, research programs and the areas investigated by our international team of researchers.

2. Reference/Research Support

You will be responsible for supporting the academic researchers engaged in AMPS publications and research programs and more generally supporting the needs of the organization. You do not need subject experience. Typical research areas include architecture librarianship, urbanism, sustainability, health and government policy. You will report to the Head of Research.

You can read more about the Intern Training Program here (including statements from former interns):

<http://architectureemps.com/training/>

Please email your CV and cover letter to:

Rachel Isaac-Menard, Head of Research, at ris@architectureemps.com with 'Intern Training Program' in the subject line. Please indicate which of the positions you are interested in.